A DELIBERATE SUICIDE.

J. S. Parker of Kansas City, Mo., Drowns Himself in the Potomac.

Policeman Breen, in company with Watchman Evans of the propagating ponds, while walking along the river bank west of the Washington monument yesterday morning, found a hat and an overcoat lying on the shore. The latter was neatly folded up and a stone had been placed on the hat to keep it from being Mo., who had been boarding at 718 10th street northwest. Letters were also found addressed a member of the produce exchange, New York | cupants and their baggage to the sister's house, city, and to Capt. F. C. Jones, who lives at 715 K street northwest. From these letters it was evident that the owner of the clothing contemplated suicide. He gave directions about the disposition of the personal property in his trunk at the boardin; house; asked that his brother-in-law be notified of his fate; that his comrades of the Grand Army would see that he was decently buried at Arlington; that it should be made known that dissipation was not the cause of his death, and that neither women, wine nor cards were to blame. The case was reported at once to police headquarters and Capt. Jones was notified. The police boat bragged the river in the vicinity and

THE BODY WAS RECOVERED and laid upon the floor of the Washington canoe club house, from the float of which it is believed that Mr. Parker jumped into the river. It was found that he had left his boarding house Saturday afternoon saying he would not be home to dinner, and it is supposed that he committed suicide Saturday night. His effects were found as described in his letter and Coroner Patterson gave permission to remove the body to Speare's undertaking establishment. Capt. Jones took charge of the body. "He stated that he knew Mr. Parker in Kansas city and that he had recently lost all his money. He came to this city about December 10 and a few days afterward Capt. Jones met him in the street and the deceased in the course of a con-versation told him that he had no particular business in this city, but had come to look around. His board was paid up to December 25, and $1.25 in m ney was found in his pockcts. The papers in the trunk of the deceased showed that he had been honorably discharged from a New York volunteer regiment. Mr. Parker was a tall and good looking man, some-what bald, but with a heavy brown moustache.

Last evening Bishop Paret visited Epiphany church, where he labored eight years as rector prior to his election as bishop of Maryland. A large congregation was present on the occasion. The religious services were led by the Rev. Dr. McKim, rector of Epiphany, and the Rev. Mr. McKee of St. John's. The bishop delivered an interesting address on the parable of the "Laborers in the Vineyard." Christmas was the theme discussed in many of the pulpits of this city yesterday. The birth of Christ and its influence upon the world, and the many incidents connected with the childhood of Christ, were described to large audiences of young and old.

Legislation Begun in Montana.

Both houses of the legislature are practically under control of the republicans. The democrats keep up their house organization, but they are doing no business. The same will be the case with all bills which pass both houses, so that the legislature can now go on with law making. Under the United States law the legislature cannot elect Senators until the second Tuesday after their organization, which will be about the end of the month, and by that time it is thought the rival houses will be consolidated. The republicans will certainly proceed to the election of Senators as soon as required time after organization elapses, and if the democrats do the same there will, next month, be two sets of Senators from Montana chiming seats in Washington.

The Times correspondent says John says she may have to put into Fayal. An officer A. Grusve, a Montreal detective, has been on Silcott's track from the start. A few judicious inquiries and a long and patient search throughout the French quarter of Montreal unearthed the fact that late one night last week a sleigh drove hurriedly up to a humble house on Sanguinet street, and that a lady sprang hastily out and struck the bell. When the astonished inmates opened the door the wife at once recognized her old schoolmate in Quebec, Herminie Thibault. Seated in the sleigh was "Un gentelhomme Americain," blown away. From letters found in the pockets of the overcoat the officers ascertained that it had belonged to J. S. It was noticed by the simple French neighbors that another man beside the joiner, Eugene Lemoine, visited the house and, although at times he would wear a slouch hat and at others a silk one, he was readily recognized as the lover of Herminie. No sooner did this come to the ears of Detective Grusve than he at once swore out warrants, armed with which he made a descent upon the house. But too late, the birds had flown. No one was in the house but the eldest sister, Mrs. Lemoine, and a vigorous search of the premises showed that both the suspected parties had taken the alarm and fled.

THE REWARD EXCITES INTEREST. Yesterday the house was again visited by the Times correspondent and a long interview followed with Mr. and Mrs. Lemoine and the youngest and prettiest of the three pretty sisters, Amarine Thibault. It took but little trouble to elicit from these unsophisticated Canadians all that Herminie had permitted them to know.

Yes, she had been there. She had arrived the Saturday previous, and on Saturday last she left by the 7:30 train for New York and was seen off at the depot by her two sisters. Ama-rine, a pretty girl of two and twenty, was only too ready to talk, and carefully as her elder sister watched her she could not help giving herseif away.
"Le Monsieur," as they all called Silcott, had not been there, but he had waited for Herminie and had taken her out to drive. Both sisters grew garrulous in speaking of his wealth and generosity, but when the reporter rose to take his leave the husband of Anna Thibault beckoned him solemnly into the passage and asked him in French:

"How much has he taken?" The reporter responded promptly: "Five hundred thousand dollars." "Mon Dieu," said the French Canadian, aghast. "Is there a reward offered for him?" The reporter replied that $5,000 in cold cash was waiting for the man who could hand him over to the United States authorities.

A royal commission first located the line in 1769, but it did so with a largeness of expression that left the question unsettled. Another commission was appointed in 1834. This commission decided that the boundary line should be the middle of Hudson river and New York bay to the sea. This seemed clear and defi-nite enough, but it was not long before new disputes arose. The bed of Raritan bay became valuable as an oyster planting ground, and the uncertainty as to jurisdiction led to frequent disputes and sometimes to bloodshed.

The line now agreed upon sweeps east of Robbin's Reef lighthouse, and includes not only that and Bedloe's Island, but Ellis Island, Oyster Island and all the bay west of them, making them New Jersey property. The land, with that in Kill von Kull, is of enormous

An Old Journalist Gone. Benjamin H. Day, a pioneer in New York daily newspaper work, died at his residence No. 55 West Twenty-fifth street, Saturday. He was born at West Springfield, Mass., April 11, 1810, and learned his trade as a printer on the Springfield Republican. In 1831 he established a printing office in New York, and in 1832 or 1833 began the publication of the New York Sun, a penny morning newspaper. The carriers of the day refused to handle a penny paper, and Mr. Day was forced to employ boys at $2 per week to do the work. Thus, he often said, he created the newsboy. His last venture was the Brother Jonathan, a monthly, which he carried on until 1862, when he retired from Shot Herself in Central Park.

Just after darkness had settled on Central Park in New York Saturday night Policeman Higgins heard a pistol shot. Following the sound he came to a summer house and there he found a pretty little woman, one whom he had seen about the walks a little while before, dead, with a dark stream of blood welling from a wound in her right temple. Beside her, where it had fallen from her hand, was a short-bar-reied, five-shot, self-cocking revolver. She was carefully and neatly dressed and seemed not to be more than twenty. Lisbon Special to the N. Y. Herald, December 22. The Yorktown has not yet arrived at Lisbon, remarked to me that the Yorktown is like an empty bottle tightly corked, she may bob about and be much tossed by the storm, but she can float through anything. The general opinion of the fleet is she would lay to for forty-eight hours. She was last seen off East Great Bank.

UNEVENTFUL VOYAGE OF THE CHICAGO. Chief Engineer Farmer of the Chicago said: The total revolutions during the run of 2,085 miles was 728,122 on the starboard side and 729,460 on the port. The average number of revolutions per minute was 38. The instruc-tions were to work up slowly and not to spurt. The average boiler pressure was 65 pounds by gauge." Mr. Farmer said that the coal average was 34 tons per day, out of which should be deducted the amount used for lighting, heating and distilling. The average speed, he said, was about 8 knots. The sails helped some, as the average range of wind was favorable, and in free, calm weather would, he estimates, have given an average assistance of 1 knot per hour.
"We had," he continued, "the average North Atlantic weather of this season of the year. The engines and boilers worked satisfictorily, he continued, "and only require the usual cleaning to be ready for further use. The indicated horse power and general scientific synopsis is not yet prepared. During the heavy weather and high seas we experienced it was noticeable that our steam steering gear was in every way satisfactory. On the whole it was an uneventful trip across the Atlantic."

THE BOSTON'S TRIP. My next visit was to the trim, business-looking craft Boston. There I met Engineers Ewan and Dixon, who said that the revolutions of their engines had been 722,108 during the passage, or an average of thirty-seven revolutions per minute fore and aft. The sails were used during the run; occasionally the square sails had been set. I asked what contretemps it was which caused the Boston to go so slowly, and they replied that it was only a very slight matter, one which was scarcely worth mentioning. It was the blowing out of the newly-drawn drain pipe of the three-inch valve. This oc-curred on two of the boilers on the port side. In a minute it became evident what had happened and so the fires were raked and the two other boilers started. After the valve was replaced the two port boilers were again used. The boilers were changed several times during the passage and there was no trouble about doing so.

"What was the coal consumption?" I asked. "It was," replied Chief Engineer Ewan, "for the entire passage as much as the City of Paris would burn in one day. We burned about 418 tons, or about 29 tons per day, and less than three tons for auxiliary purposes. Our steam pressure averaged 78 pounds."
"Did the steering gear work well?"

"Yes; only once, and then for only four minutes, was it out of order." "The Boston is the best sea boat I have ever been in. I think she is better than Chicago."

"Where are your weaknesses?" "We don't think any sea could affect this boat. We have experienced all kinds of weather in her and we are proud of our ship." THE ATLANTA'S BEHAVIOR.

Chief Engineer William Harris was taking observations as to the seagoing qualities of the Atlanta's steam binnacle when I reached that ship, which, notwithstanding the doubts entertained as to her seagoing qualities, managed to stick by the flagship from the commencement of the voyage to the end, which, as one of the officers remarked, was more than the Boston had been able to do. The chief engineer said: "Our average revolutions were about forty. with average boiler pressure of about eighty pounds. The consumption of coal averaged thirty tons per day, including consumption for auxiliary purposes. We hoisted sails whenever the Boston did so. We steamed over on four boilers and got across without blowing. "We had no trouble from the time we left Boston until we arrived here. Our machinery raced a little on two occasions, but not enough to do any damage.'

"What do you think of the Atlanta?" I asked. "She is an elegant sea boat," he replied. "She ran along without any trouble. As an example of this I may state that I was not called out of bed once during the voyage. I consider the Atlanta just as good a sea boat as the Bos-

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of direction and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy dectors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly neurished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.
